I. Background

This report presents a brief overview of key findings of two national samples of Haitian public opinion. The surveys were undertaken by the Latin American Public Opinion Project (LAPOP) as part of its AmericasBarometer series of interviews. Those efforts were supported by generous grants from the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the Inter American Development Bank (IADB), and Vanderbilt University's Center for the Americas. In both years, 22 countries from the hemisphere were included in the surveys with a total of over 34,000 respondents.

In Haiti the surveys in both years were conducted in Creole, and included a sample of approximately 1,500 respondents. In both years, the questionnaire was pretested and interviewers trained by a native Haitian, Dominique Zéphyr, the co-author of this report.

The results presented here cover only a small segment of the entire set of survey questions. Far more extensive analysis can be carried out on the questions analyzed here as well as on many other items. The full questionnaire and the technical description of the sample are contained in the appendices of this report.

Demographic and Socio-Economic Characteristics of the 2008 Sample

The sample carried out in 2008 consisted of 1,536 respondents, evenly divided between male and female, as shown in Figure I-1.

The respondents are shown grouped by age cohorts. The average age of the sample is 37 years.

I-2. Distribution of the Sample by Age

Haiti is quite rural (Figure I-3) the most highly rural of the countries in the AmericasBarometer sample, even though the size of the country's overall territory is small (27,000 square km.), or only somewhat larger than El Salvador, the smallest country in Central America. Nonetheless, with over 8 million people, its population density is high (over 250 per sq. km.), so even in rural areas, there are significant concentrations of population. Therefore, it is important not to exaggerate the rural/urban split, since census-defined rural areas might seem quite urban in the context of other countries in the region.

Finally, the educational level of the sample is shown in Figure I-4. Educational achievement data in Haiti are controversial. Many sources put literacy at about 50%, while the Haitian Census bureau puts it at 61%, which would imply (using official definitions) that only three-fifths of the population has had over three years of schooling. The survey data, in contrast, show a higher level of education. For example, 80% of the respondents in the 2008 survey had four years or more of education (three years is normally considered the minimum necessary for literacy). If the survey had matched the census data, about 39% should have shown fewer than four years of education. The census data, however accurate they may be, may also be misleading, for two reasons. First, the official statistics report results for the population five years and older. Given the youthful nature of the population pyramid in Haiti, a large segment of those reported by the census bureau as being illiterate or not having a primary education, have actually not yet completed their education. The census results, therefore, understate the levels of education achieved by the voting age population of the country, which is the basis for the survey sample presented here. Second, the census is now several years out of date, and educational levels have almost certainly increased somewhat since the census was last taken. These factors many not fully explain the difference between the survey and the census data, and we suspect that survey rejection rates in the survey were higher among the least well educated, so that the sample actually probably overstates to some degree the level of education of the voting aged population.

II. Political Legitimacy and Trust in Institutions

Political Legitimacy

The stability of a political system and its ability to weather crises without succumbing to breakdown has been directly linked by social scientists to legitimacy. Seymour Martin Lipset, one of the leading theorists in the area of democratic stability defined legitimacy as “the capacity of the system to engender and maintain the belief that the existing political institutions are the most appropriate ones for the society” (Lipset 1981 77).<sup>1</sup> Lipset hypothesized, based primarily upon his observation of the impact of the Great Depression on Europe, that systems viewed by their citizens as being legitimate would survive a crisis of effectiveness (e.g. when the economy takes a nosedive), but those that were seen as illegitimate would tend to collapse under the stress of economic crisis. Lipset refers specifically to Germany, Austria and Spain as examples of fundamentally illegitimate systems that experienced breakdowns of democracy when buffeted by a crisis of effectiveness. The United States and Great Britain, however, survived the Great Depression without political breakdown, because of the legitimacy of these systems.

Much research has helped to confirm the importance of legitimacy in building stable democracies. In a forthcoming book by a co-author of this report, the importance of legitimacy is demonstrated for the Latin American region (Booth and Seligson forthcoming), and a recent book by Larry Diamond has done so for the developing world in general (Diamond 2008). Another world-wide appraisal is about to be published (Gilley forthcoming).

Virtually all studies stress the importance of service delivery in building the legitimacy of a political system. In Haiti, the record is not good. The effectiveness of the Haitian state in terms of delivering economic growth and increased welfare to its citizens has been very limited and therefore the ability of the democratic system to engender legitimacy significantly constrained. With a GNP per capita (source: World Bank) in 2006 of only $430, among the lowest in all of Latin America and the Caribbean, not only is Haiti a very poor country, but its GNP per capita since 2000 has actually declined according to the World Bank ($470 in the year 2000). During this same period, all of the other countries in the region have seen some growth, and many have seen substantial growth. High levels of crime and violence, coupled with poor levels of human development overall (the UNDP HDI rank in 2005 was 146 out of 177 countries), only magnify the problems of poor state performance.

It should come as no surprise, then, that the LAPOP AmericasBarometer survey finds low levels of legitimacy in Haiti. A core series of items measures what is called “diffuse support” or legitimacy of the political system, which LAPOP refers to as its “PSA5” series that has been asked in every LAPOP survey for some 20 years, thus we have a good comparative basis for interpreting the level of systemic legitimacy in the country. The five items read as follows:

B1. To what extent do you think the courts in Haiti guarantee a fair trial? (Read: If you think the courts do not ensure justice at all , choose number 1; if you think the courts ensure justice a lot, choose number 7 or choose a point in between the two.)
B2. To what extent do you respect the political institutions of Haiti?
B3. To what extent do you think that citizens’ basic rights are well protected by the political system of Haiti?
B4. To what extent do you feel proud of living under the political system of Haiti?
B6. To what extent do you think that one should support the political system of Haiti?

The reader should note that in each of the bar charts shown in this report, confidence intervals are displayed as an “I” on each bar. This means that when two bars are being compared, if the two “I” indicators overlap, there is no significant difference between them. On the other hand, if the “I”s do not overlap, this means that 95 times out of 100 the differences are significant.

<sup>2</sup> The original questions, as shown in the questionnaire, were all scored on a 1-7 scale, which is the LAPOP standard for these items. The items were rescaled to a 0-100 range to give them a familiar interpretation. This was done using this formula (item -1/6 x 100).

The five items in this series were then combined into a single index, also based on a 0-100 metric.<sup>3</sup> Comparing the 2006 and 2008 samples (Figure II-2), reveals a decline, but one that is not statistically significant.

<sup>3</sup> The five 0-100 items were added, divided by 5 and averaged. Respondents who did not answer a majority of the items were excluded. Those who answered a majority but not all, were given a score based on the items that they did answer.

The comparison of Haiti on this overall system support scale with other countries in the region is shown in Figure II-3. There it is shown that Haiti scores near the very bottom in the Americas, not surprising given the poor performance of the system in providing economic growth, social development and, perhaps most importantly, citizen security. Note that the results presented here are controlled for presidential popularity (item M1 in the survey), which needs to be done in order to remove from the results the impact of a popular/unpopular incumbent administration.

Variation in System Support

Many factors can influence citizen attitudes toward their system. No doubt, as the comparative results above show, the overall poor performance of Haiti is an important factor. But, within Haiti there is variation in support based on some key factors, the most important of which is regional (living in the “Northern Zone”), and the second is satisfaction with the performance of the incumbent President (a factor removed from the results shown above). These results are shown in the regression equation depicted graphically below (Figure II-4). Normally, regression results are shown as coefficients in a table, but many readers find that form of presentation confusing. So, in order to simplify these complex results, the graph below shows a series of possible factors that could explain variation in system support on the left-hand side of the graph. The lines on the graph that overlap with the zero vertical line do not have a statistically significant impact on system support, while those that do not overlap the zero point do. Finally, if the dot on the horizontal line, which represents the estimated impact of that variable, is to the right of the zero point, then this implies a positive impact on system support, while if the dot is to the left of zero (i.e. a negative number), this means the impact is negative. In Haiti, living in the North and satisfaction with the current president both boost legitimacy.

It is possible to view these results from a different perspective, that of bar charts, and those are shown in Figure II-5. There it is shown that gender, education, urban/rural residence and age do not significantly vary in system support. However, it is also clear that when not controlled for other variables (as was done in the regressions above), as education in increases in Haiti, system support declines. This is worrisome, since it is the better educated who often have the most political influence in a given country.

Figure II-5. Average System Support by Gender, Education Level, Urban and Rural Areas and Age

Trust in Political Institutions

Moving beyond the generalized system support index, the questionnaire included an entire battery of items to measure trust in specific institutions in Haiti. As asked in the questionnaire, they are listed below:

B11. To what extent do you trust the Electoral Commission (KEP)?
B13. To what extent do you trust the Parliament?
B14. To what extent do you trust the national government?
B15. To what extent do you trust the Citizen Protection Office?
B18. To what extent do you trust the National Police?
B20. To what extent do you trust the Catholic Church?
B21. To what extent do you trust the political parties?
B21A. To what extent do you trust the President?
B31. To what extent do you trust the Supreme Court?
B32. To what extent do you trust the local or municipal government?
B43. To what extent are you proud of being Haitian?
B37. To what extent do you trust the media?
B47. To what extent do you trust elections?

The survey results are shown below (Figure II-6). Only two institutions are scored on the positive end of the continuum, the national police and the Catholic Church. At the bottom end are political parties, which is not at all uncommon in Latin America, and indeed even in advanced industrial democracies, but the Office of Citizen Protection (the Office of the Ombudsman ) has the lowest rating.

Comparisons with the 2006 results are shown in Figure II-7. There are some areas of significant improvement: the National Police and the municipal governments. On the other hand, the national government and the legislature declined significantly. The other institutions remained statistically unchanged between 2006 and 2008.

III. Loyalty to the Democratic System

Moving beyond the question of legitimacy of the political system and trust in specific institutions, this study now turns to the support for democracy itself. At its most basic level, the study attempts to determine the proportion of Haitians who are so disaffected with the system that they would approve of overthrowing it. We categorize the “disloyal opposition,” versus those who simply have low levels of trust in specific institutions, as those who would approve of people attempting to overthrow an elected government:

E3. Of people participating in a group working to violently overthrow an elected government. How much do you approve or disapprove?

The results are shown in Figure III-2. The results show that only a small proportion of Haitians would approve of a violent overthrow of a democratically elected government.

Since only a small proportion of Haitians would approve the overthrow of an elected government (7.9%), in order to further analyze this item in the survey we, from here on, use the “average” score of support for the overthrow of an elected government rather than the percentage points.<sup>4</sup> Comparing the 2006 and 2008 samples (Figure III-2), shows an increase in the level of support for the violent overthrow of an elected government.

<sup>4</sup> The original question was scored on a 1-10 scale. The item was rescaled to a 0-100. This was done using this formula (item-1/9 x 100)

Moreover, and more worrying, when compared to other countries in the region, the average support of Haitians for this point of view is rather high. While the averages remain low, coups that overthrow governments are typically carried out by small minorities, so one cannot safely dismiss these low averages as irrelevant.

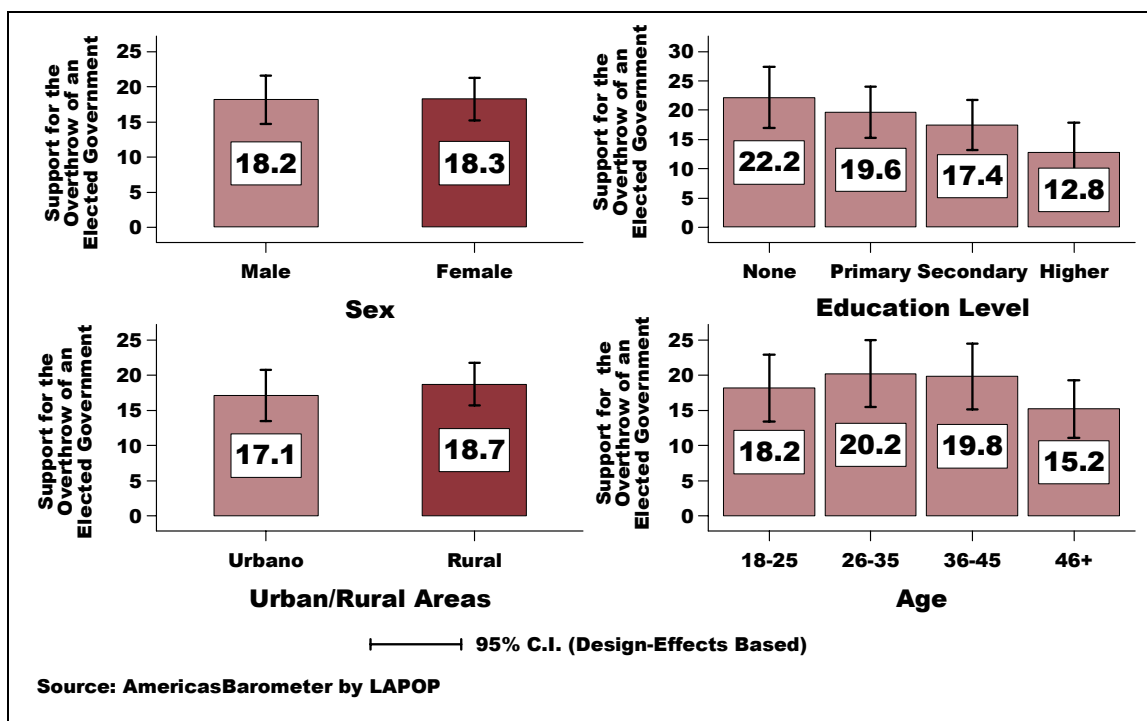

Figure III-4. Support for the Overthrow of an Elected Government by Gender, Education Level, Urban and Rural Areas and Age

IV. Concentration of Power in the Executive

Latin America and the Caribbean countries have a long tradition of concentration of power in the hands of the executive branch of government, while neutering the influence and control of the legislative and judicial branches of government. As democracy expanded in the 1980s and 1990s in most of the region, the balance began to shift and many of the countries established a reasonable system of checks and balances. Yet, by the early 20th century, there has been a notable movement in the other direction, reversing the trend in several nations. Haiti's limited experience with democracy has been fraught with problems of executive control and weakness in the other branches of government. In the 2008 survey there is a battery of items that deals directly with this question:

Taking into account the current situation of this country, I would like you to tell me how much you agree or disagree with the following statements, again using card B:

POP101. It is necessary for the progress of this country that our presidents limit the voice and vote of opposition parties, how much do you agree or disagree with that view?
8.DK/DR

POP102. When the Parliament hinders the work of our government, our presidents should govern without the Parliament. How much do you agree or disagree with that view?
8. DK/DR

POP103. When the Supreme Court hinders the work of our government, it should be ignored by our presidents. How much do you agree or disagree with that view?
8. DK/DR

In analyzing these questions, we recoded the original scale items, which were originally scored on a 1-7 basis, into a dichotomy. All of those who would approve (scores 5, 6 and 7) were considered to have approved this form of executive concentration of power, and those who scored below that (including the neutral category of ‘4’) were scored as disapproving. The results are shown in Figure IV-1. In no case do a majority of Haitians support these measures. Yet, as can be seen, the strongest support is for the executive to limit the rights of opposition parties. This is not surprising because of the low standing political parties have in Haiti, as shown above. Support for the president governing without the legislature or ignoring the Supreme Court was found among over one-fifth of the sample, again reflecting the opinion of Haitians of their low trust in these institutions. Nonetheless, these findings suggest considerable support for executive concentration of power in Haiti.

As shown in Figure IV-2, Figure IV-3 and Figure IV-4, support for executive dominance is widespread, equally evidenced among males vs. females, poorly and well educated, urban and rural and all age cohorts. The only exception is in the last item, support for executive dominance over the Supreme Court. For that item, those with higher levels of education are significantly less supportive. From a programmatic standpoint, this suggests that education in Haiti does have some impact when it comes to promoting democratic values, but the impact is limited to values related to the judicial sector and not the legislature or the parties.

V. Institutionalization of the Political Parties and the Parliament

Attitudes toward Political Parties and Parliament

The very low esteem in which Haitian political parties and the Parliament are held suggests that this is an area in which democracy promotion may be especially needed, even if the task in changing views will not be an easy one. Parties and legislators are not trusted, but for trust to increase, they both need to undergo reforms. Again, this is not a problem unique to Haiti, as prior LAPOP research (Boidi 2008) and other work (Mainwaring and Scully 1995) has shown. Recent research on parties and legislatures has suggested that citizens misunderstand their roles and therefore criticize them for doing what they actually are supposed to be doing (Hibbing and Theiss-Morse 2001 ; Hibbing and Theiss-Morse 2002). For example, citizens criticize parties for “doing politics,” when that is what they are supposed to be doing. In short, citizen education and party reforms are likely both needed in Haiti.

A general questionnaire item, as part of the trust in institutions series is:

B21. To what extent do you trust the political parties?

As shown in Figure V-1, there is some improvement in trust between 2006 and 2008, but the difference is not statistically significant (the confidence intervals overlap).

Compared to other countries in the region, trust in parties is low, but not at the bottom, as some other countries express even lower trust. This comparison is shown in Figure V-2.

Figure V-2. Trust in Political Parties in Comparative Perspective

Trust in political parties does vary significantly by some demographic/socio-economic characteristics. It is higher in rural areas, and among those who are older, but lower among those who have higher levels of education, as shown in Figure V-3.

Figure V-3. Trust in Political Parties by Gender, Education Level, Urban and Rural Areas and Age

To deepen our understanding of political parties, we included a special series of items in the 2008 survey that were not included in 2006:

Now I am going to read a series of sentences about Haiti’s political parties and then I will ask your opinion. We will continue to use the same scale of 1 to 7 where 1 means not at all and 7 means a lot.

EPP1. Thinking of political parties in general, to what extent do Haiti’s political parties represent their voters well? 8. DK/DR	EPP1
EPP2. To what extent does corruption exist within Haiti’s political parties? 8. DK/DR	EPP2
EPP3. How often do political parties listen to the average person? 8. DK/DR	EPP3
EC1. And now thinking of the Parliament. To what extent does the Parliament limit the power of the president? 8. DK/DR	EC1
EC2. To what extent do members the Parliament waste time discussing, debating and negotiating among themselves? 8. DK/DR	EC2
EC3. How important to the country are the laws passed by the Parliament? 8. DK/DR	EC3
EC4. To what extent does the Parliament accomplish what you would hope for it to do? 8. DK/DR	EC4

The first three items ask for an assessment of the role of political parties in Haiti. The results are shown in Figure V-4. Many Haitians believe that there is a considerable amount of corruption within political parties. Haitians, on average, do not think that they are well represented by their parties, nor are they listened to.

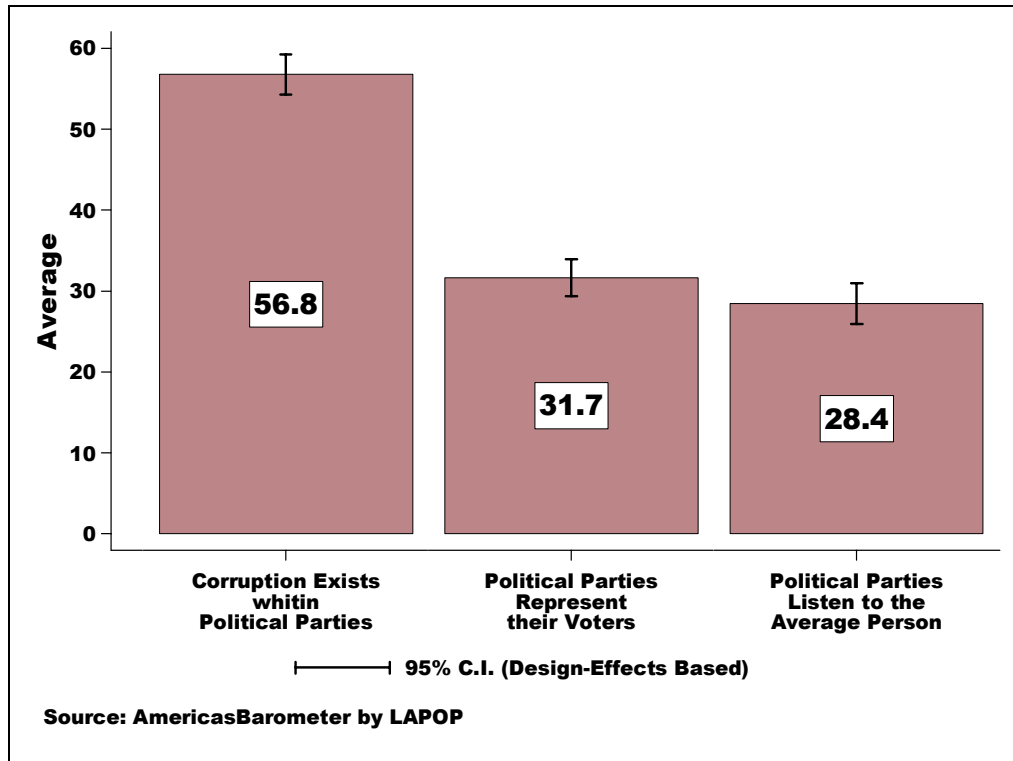

Figure V-4. Citizens' Views on the Performance of Political Parties

The remaining items focus on the specific legitimate roles of parties. Haitians believe that the Parliament limits the power of the president, which in a democracy is by design, and a good thing, given the history of presidential dominance in Haiti. But, Haitians also believe that the members of Parliament spend too much time debating, but debate is the very essence of legislature. Again, this is not an unusual perception, even in advanced industrial democracies, but in those countries political institutions are considered to be well entrenched.

Satisfaction with the Performance of the Parliament

The survey included a direct question on the performance of the Parliament:

M2. Now speaking of the Parliament. Thinking of those members in the Parliament as a whole, without considering the political parties to which they belong, do you believe that the members of the Parliament are performing their jobs very well, well, neither well nor poorly, poorly, or very poorly?

(1) Very well (2) Well (3) Neither well nor poorly (fair) (4) Poorly (5) Very poorly (8) DK/DR

However, these results are not at variance with the region as a whole, as shown in Figure V-7. Indeed, opinions in the U.S. are lower.

The negative evaluations of the legislature are shared across the demographic and socio-economic characteristics of the population, indicating that these evaluations are widespread and not concentrated in any particular group.

Figure V-8. Satisfaction with the Performance of the Parliament by Gender, Education Level, Urban and Rural Areas and Age

VI. Corruption

The LAPOP surveys examine both perception of corruption and experience with corruption. The perception items, we have found, however, are less helpful and reliable than the experience items. The overall problem with the perception items is that in the context of high levels of corruption over long periods of time, citizens can begin to think that this is the “normal” state of affairs and therefore not report that corruption is “high.” Such is the case with Haiti.

Perception of Corruption

The corruption perception item is shown below. The results are startling (see Figure VI-1) as they show perception to be the lowest in Haiti of the countries in the region. We convinced that that this perception information is telling us more that people are so used to corruption in the country that the consider it to be normal.

EXC7. Taking into account your own experience or what you have heard, corruption among public officials is [Read] (1) Very common, (2) Common, (3) Uncommon, or (4) Very uncommon? (8) DK/DR

Corruption Victimization

The more reliable corruption experience measure, what LAPOP calls, “corruption victimization,” is based on a scale of items as shown below:

	INAP Did not try or did not have contact	No	Yes	DK/DR
Now we want to talk about your personal experience with things that happen in everyday life...
EXC2. Has a police officer ask you for a bribe during the past year?		0	1	8	EXC2
EXC6. During the past year did any government employee ask you for a bribe?		0	1	8	EXC6
EXC11. During the past year did you have any official dealings in the municipality/local government? If the answer is No → mark 9 If it is Yes→ ask the following: During the past year, to process any kind of document (like a license, for example), did you have to pay any money above that required by law?	9	0	1	8	EXC11
EXC13. Are you currently employed? If the answer is No → mark 9 If it is Yes→ ask the following: At your workplace, have you been bribed within the past year?	9	0	1	8	EXC13
EXC14. During the past year, have you had any dealings with the courts? If the answer is No → note down 9 If it is Yes→ ask the following: Did you have to pay a bribe to the courts within the past year?	9	0	1	8	EXC14
EXC15. Have you use any public health services during the past year? If the answer is No → mark 9 If it is Yes→ ask the following: In order to receive attention in a hospital or a clinic during the past year, did you have to pay a bribe?	9	0	1	8	EXC15
EXC16. Have you had a child in school during the past year? If the answer is No → mark 9 If it is Yes→ ask the following: Have you had to pay a bribe at school during the past year?	9	0	1	8	EXC16

Corruption victimization has been shown to have a powerfully corrosive impact on system support in many Latin American countries (Seligson 2002 ; Seligson and Recanatini 2003 ; Zéphyr 2008 ; López-Cálix, Seligson and Alcázar forthcoming). As can be seen in Figure VI-2, Haitians are exposed to high levels of many forms of corruption. It may be, of course, that even these high scores are an underestimate as some respondents may not be willing to report their experiences to interviewers. But also note that these items are based on users of specific services, so include only those who have children in school, use the public health service, etc.

In Figure VI-3 these individual forms of corruption are summed, so that an overall measure of corruption victimization is created. The result is that nearly one out of every two of Haitians report being victimized by corruption in the year prior to the survey. As shown in Figure VI-4, Haiti reports the highest levels in the hemisphere.

The only positive news is that since 2006, the corruption levels seems to have declined somewhat (Figure VI-5), but the difference is not statistically significant, so it would be wrong to make too much out of this finding.

Who are the most likely to become victims of corruption?

There is some internal variation in corruption victimization. As shown in Figure VI-6, those who live in the Northern zone are less likely to be victims. Those who have higher levels of education and those with more children experience more corruption. No doubt, the very high levels of corruption in the school system help explain the latter findings.

VII. Citizen Security

Citizen security is a major issue in many countries in Latin America and the Caribbean. According to several studies, crime is more serious there than other regions of the world (Cruz 2008). Haiti’s history of violence, much of it political, makes this a special case.

Perception of Crime

We first focus on the degree to which Haitians are concerned about crime. This focus is reflected in the following item:

AOJ11A. And speaking of the country in general, how much do you think that the level of crime that we have now represents a threat to our future well-being?
(1) Very much (2) Somewhat (3) Little (4) None (8) DK/DR

As shown in Figure VII-1, opinions are quite divided. Only a bit more than one-quarter of respondents believes that crime is “very much” a threat to future well-being.

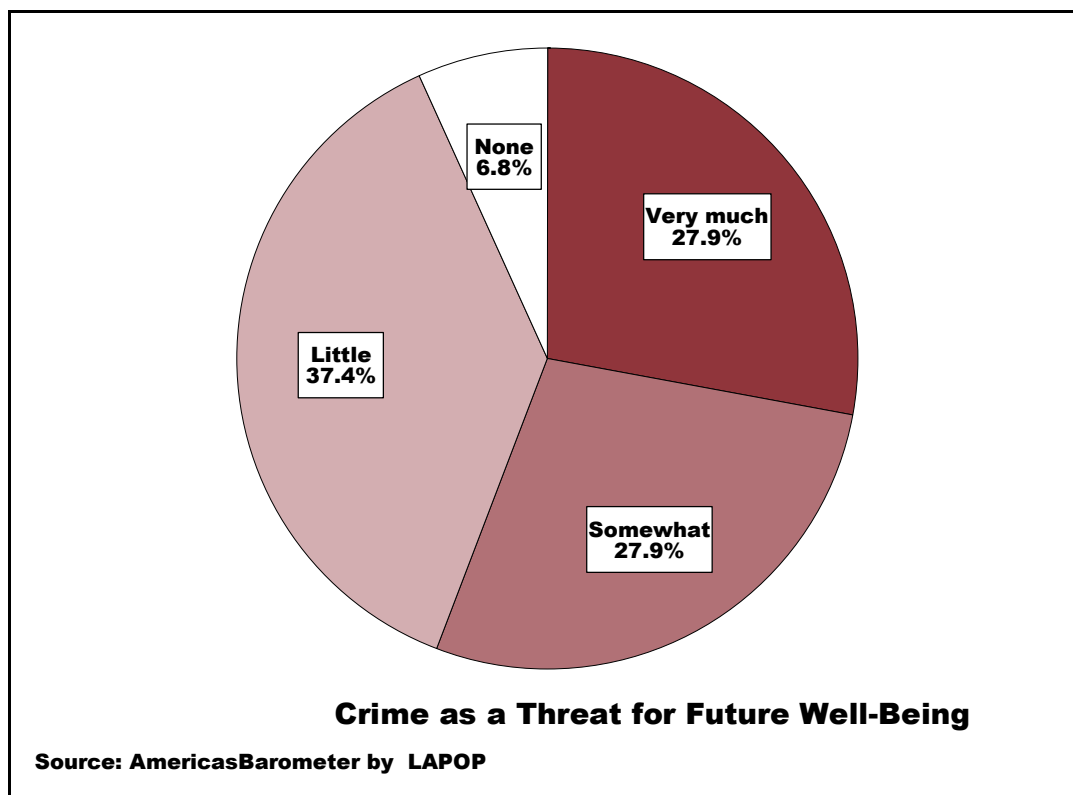

Figure VII-1. Crime as a Threat for Future Well-Being of the country

Crime Victimization

A more direct measure is crime victimization. The core item is:

VIC1. Now changing the subject, have you been a victim of any type of crime in the past 12 months?
 (1) Yes      (2) No      (8) DK/DR

The results in Figure VII-2 show that in 2006, nearly 17% of respondents report having been victimized, a proportion that declined to 14% in 2008, but the drop is not statistically significant.

There are, of course, many kinds of crime, including violent and non-violent. In the 2008 survey we did not ask a follow-up to the general crime question, but in 2006 we did. The results showed that robbery with physical violence or threats are the most reported crime among the victims (see Figure VII-4). Comparing violent and non-violent crime, violent crime is the most common. About 57% of the victims of crime reported to have experienced a type of crime that involved violence (either robbery with physical violence or threats, physical violence without robbery, rape or sexual assault, or kidnapping).

Who are the most likely to become victims of crime?

A regression analysis does not reveal that any particular socio-economic or demographic group more likely than others to be crime victims, as shown in Figure VII-4 and Figure VII-5. The only pattern that is clear relates to age, with the youngest and oldest respondents in the survey having less exposure to crime, while those in the middle of the age cohorts having the greatest exposure to it.

Perception of Insecurity

Fear of crime is measured by the following item:

AOJ11. Speaking of the neighborhood where you live, and thinking of the possibility of being assaulted or robbed, do you feel very safe, somewhat safe, somewhat unsafe or very unsafe?
(1) Very safe (2) Somewhat safe (3) Somewhat unsafe (4) Very unsafe (8) DK/DR

As shown in Figure VII-6, only 17.7% of respondents feel very safe. Yet, as shown in Figure VII-7, the perception of insecurity has declined since 2006, but not significantly so.

The perception of insecurity does not vary significantly by socio-economic or demographic factors, as shown in Figure VII-9.

Figure VII-9. Perception of Insecurity by Gender, Education Level, Urban and Rural Areas and Age

Support for the Rule of Law, and the Impact of Crime

The final set of analyses relate to the impact of crime. Two items measure that, as shown below:

- AOJ8. In order to apprehend criminals do you think that the authorities should always respect the law or that occasionally they can skate close to the limits of the law?
 (1) They should always respect the law (2) Can act on the margins occasionally (8)DK/DR
- AOJ12. If you were a victim of a robbery or assault how much faith do you have that the judicial system would punish the guilty?
 (1) A lot (2) Some (3) Little (4) None (8) DK/DR

The first item shows that most Haitians believe that the law needs to be respected. The results are shown in Figure VII-10.

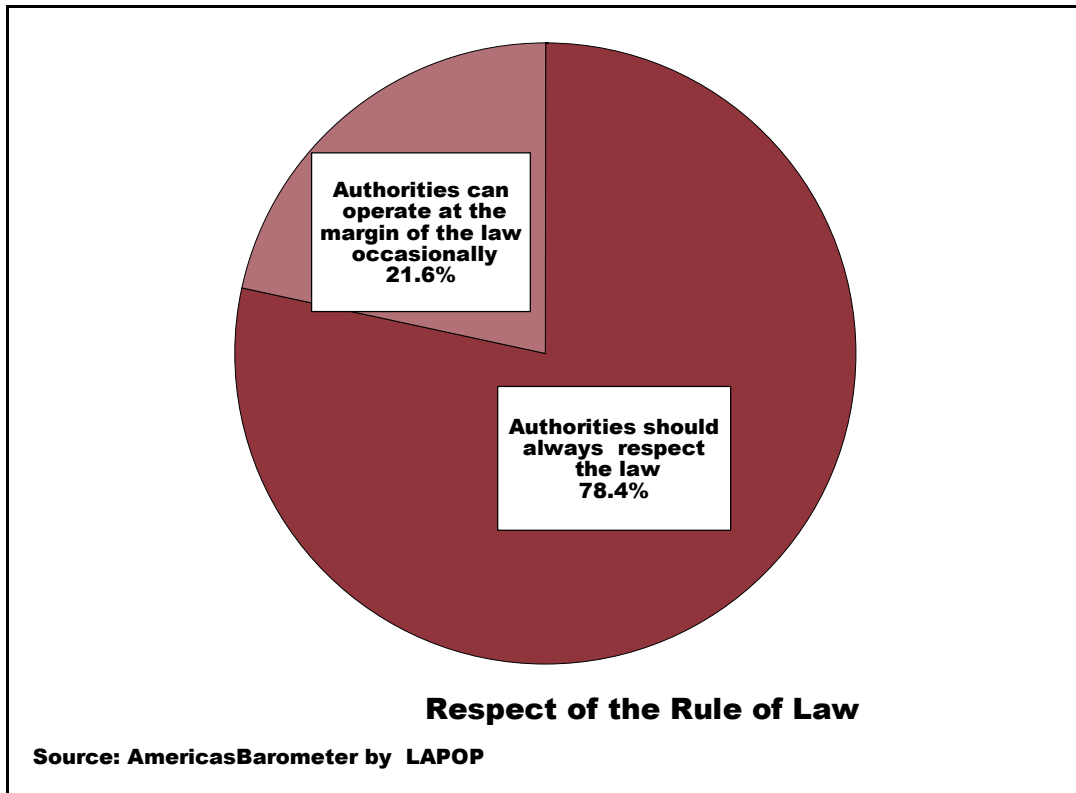

Figure VII-10. Support for the Respect of the Rule of Law

The only statistically significant predictor of respect for the rule of law is the respondent perception of their family economic situation. As that turns from positive to negative, the support for the rule of law declines, as shown in Figure VII-11.

Figure VII-11. Determinants of Support for the Respect of the Rule of Law

Haitians are evenly divided in their belief that the justice system will punish those who commit crimes, as shown in Figure VII-12.

VIII. Conclusions

This study presented key findings of two national surveys carried out in Haiti by the Latin American Public Opinion Project (LAPOP) as part of its AmericasBarometer series of interviews. We assessed the level of legitimacy of the political system among the population. The results indicated a low level of confidence in the political system among Haitians. Haiti scores near the very bottom in the Americas. This is not surprising given the troubled political history of the country. Haiti has experienced two democratic breakdowns in the past twenty years, delaying the consolidation of a strong democratic political system.

We explored the extent of approval to the concentration of power in the hands of the executive among Haitians. Only a small proportion of Haitians would approve the overthrow of an elected government. Although when compared to other countries in the region, this average support among Haitians is rather high. We argued that these low averages should not be considered irrelevant, since coups that overthrow governments are typically carried out by small minorities.

We also examined the attitudes of Haitians toward political parties and the parliament. We found that political parties are one of the less trusted institutions in Haiti. Many Haitians believe that there is a considerable amount of corruption within political parties. Haitians, on average, do not think that they are well represented by their parties, nor are they listened by them. Regarding the parliament, Haitians are not satisfied with its performance. Haitians believe that the Parliament limits the power of the president, which in a democracy by design can be a good thing. Given the history of presidential dominance in Haiti, this result is not surprising. But at the same time, Haitians believe that the members of Parliament spend too much time debating. Strengthening these political institutions, political parties and the Parliament, is needed in order for the country to overcome the difficulties in establishing a stable democracy twenty two years after the end of the Duvalier's dictatorship.

Finally, we turned to the analysis of corruption and insecurity in the country. Haiti reports the highest levels of corruption in the hemisphere. Haitians are exposed to high levels of many forms of corruption. A high percentage of people who had dealings with the municipality, courts, schools, health services, or work reported to have paid a bribe. We also found that one-quarter of Haitians believes crime is "very much" a threat to the future well-being of the country. Moreover, "violent" crime is the most common form of crime. Indeed, robbery with physical violence or threats is the most reported form of crime among victims.

III. Haiti 2008 Survey: Technical Description of the Sample Design

Universe

The survey universe has national coverage of adults living in the country's 5 regions: the Metropolitan Area of Port-Au-Prince, the rest of the department of West, the Northern, Central, and Southern regions. The universe is also comprised of adults living in urban and rural areas.

Sampling Frame

The distribution of the sample was based primarily on the data for the last census carried out by the Bureau du Recensement Général de la Population et de l'Habitat de l'institut Haïtien de Statistique et d'Informatique (IHSI). The distribution of the sample by regions, urban and rural areas, and municipalities was based on the information of the 2003 census. However, we were unable to obtain access to the census bureau maps. In order to overcome this problem, we used instead the information about the polling places in the last presidential election of 2005. Therefore, for the selection of the localities, we used the electoral register, which includes the name of the localities and the addresses of the polling places.

Sampling Method

The sample was designed to include all non-institutionalized adults; in other words, it excludes people living in the country's jails, schools, hospitals and Police Academies. It is a random stratified sample. The stratification ensures the inclusion of the most important geographic regions in the country: a) the Metropolitan Area of Port-Au-Prince, b) the rest of the department of the West; c) the Northern region that consist of the department of North, Northeast, and Northwest; d) the Central region that includes the department of Centre and Artibonite; 2) the Southern region that includes the departments of South, Southeast, Grand-Anse, and Nippes. The sample was further sub-stratified into urban and rural areas. We interviewed 1536 respondents. Table III shows the distribution of the interviews in each region by urban and rural areas.

Distribution of the Sample by Region and Urban/Rural Areas

Region	Total Country		Urban		Rural
	N	%	N	%	N	%
Metropolitan Area of Port-Au-Prince	280	18.23	280	100.00	0	0.00
Rest of Department of West	360	23.44	24	6.67	336	93.33
Northern Region	252	16.41	72	28.57	180	71.43
Central Region	336	21.88	96	28.57	240	71.43
Southern Region	308	20.05	32	10.39	276	89.61
Total Country	1,536	100.00	504	32.81	1,032	67.19

In order to draw the sample, we follow a multistage procedure. In the first stage, we selected the municipalities according to their population size, followed by the localities, which were drawn based on the total number of registered voters in each polling places, and finally, the block and the household. All these stages were selected using the Probability Proportional to Size (PPS) method.

The sample was also clustered in order to reduce travel time and costs. A total of 12 and 8 interviews were conducted in each sampling point in rural an urban areas, respectively. The sample is composed of 149 sampling points: 63 urban and 86 rural.

Distribution of the Sampling points Across Regions

	Number of interviews			Sampling points
	Urban	Rural	Total	Urban	Rural	Total
Metropolitan Area of Port-Au-Prince	280	0	280	35	0	35
Rest of Department of West	24	336	360	3	28	31
Northern Region	72	180	252	9	15	24
Central Region	96	240	336	12	20	32
Southern Region	32	276	308	4	23	27
Total Country	504	1,032	1,536	63	86	149

Confidence Level, and Margins of Error

The confidence levels anticipated for the national sample was 95 percent, with a margin of error of 2.5 percent, assuming a 50/50 proportion in dichotomous variables. The margins of error for a confidence level of 95 percent assuming a Simple Random Sample (SRS) design are:

Simple size and Margin of error (Confidence level 95%)

Region	Sample size	Margin of error
Metropolitan Area of Port-Au-Prince	280	5.8
Rest of Department of West	360	5.2
Northern	252	6.2
Central	336	5.4
Southern	308	5.6
Areas
Urban	504	4.4
Rural	1032	3.1
Total Country	1536	2.5

Since the sample is stratified and clustered, we have to take into account the complex sample design to accurately estimate the precision of the sample. The appendix c shows the maximum error for a list of variables as well as the details on the design effect.

Design Effects

Accuracy of the Findings

Two types of errors affect all surveys: non-sampling errors and sampling ones. Non-sampling errors are those that are committed during the data collection and processing. These can be controlled using a good measuring instrument, adequately training the surveyors, supervising the fieldwork, and with appropriate data collection programs. These errors can be controlled but not quantified. However, comparing the sample results with those of the population gives us an idea of whether these errors have generated biases that reduce the representativeness of the sample. The use of handheld computers (palm pilots) probably reduced these errors by carrying out consistency checks of the responses and flow of the interview at the same time and place that it was done. Additionally, by eliminating the process of data entry, we eliminated the errors that this activity generates. With the traditional procedures of paper-based questionnaires, processes of coding and critiquing the data must be carried out in the office (eliminated by using palm pilots), which can also generate errors. With paper questionnaires, computer-based consistency checks can only be run several weeks after the data was collected. Correcting errors detected in the office during the critique or by programs that detect inconsistencies is difficult or impossible given the separation in time and space between the moment of the interview on paper and the detection of these errors.

Sampling errors are a product of chance and from surveying a sample and not the entire population. When a sample is selected, this sample is one of many possible samples that could be selected from the population. The variability that exists between all these possible samples is the sampling error, which we could measure if all these samples were available, obviously an impossible situation. In practice, what is done is to estimate this over the variance obtained from the sample itself.

To estimate the sampling error of a statistic (average, percentage, or ratio), we calculate the standard error, which is the square root of the population variance of the statistic. This allows us to measure how close the statistic is to the result that would have been obtained if the entire population were interviewed under the same conditions. To calculate this error, it is very important to consider the design with which the sample was selected. The design effect (DEF – above is DEF) indicates the efficiency of the design used in relation to a unrestricted random sampling design (URS). A value of 1 indicates that the standard error (SE) obtained for both designs (the complex and the URS) is equal; that is, the complex sampling is as efficient as the URS with the same-sized sample. If the value is greater than 1, the complex sampling produces a SE greater than that obtained with a URS.

$$DEF = SE_{complex} / SE_{URS}$$

The table shows the 95% confidence intervals (1.96 times the SE) and the design effects (DEF). The table also shows the value of the statistic in question (average or percentage). The SE were estimated with the Stata 9 computational package. Extreme values come from a high degree of homogeneity within each cluster. In other words, in these cases there is an important spatial segregation of people according to their socioeconomic condition, which reduces the efficiency of cluster sampling to measure these characteristics.

It is worth stating that sampling error is usually 10% to 40% greater than that which would have been obtained with unrestricted random sampling. For example, in the case of Costa Rica, the important index of support for democracy (PSA5) has a sampling error of 0.83. This means that the 95% confidence interval (1.96 times the SE) for the average of this index (63.1) goes from 61.5 to 64.7. According to the DEF of the table, this interval is 62% greater than that which would have been obtained with a URS.

Now we will use a card...This card has a 7 point scale; each point indicates a score that goes from 1, meaning NOT AT ALL, to 7, meaning A LOT. For example, if I asked you to what extent you like watching television, if you don't like watching it at all, you would choose a score of 1, and if, on the contrary, you like watching television a lot, you would indicate the number 7 to me. If your opinion is between not at all and a lot, choose an intermediate score. So, to what extent do you like watching television? Read me the number. [Make sure that the respondent understands correctly].

[Give card B]: Now we will use a similar card, but this time 1 means “strongly disagree” and 7 means “strongly agree.” A number in between 1 and 7 represents an intermediate score. I am going to read various statements and I would like you to tell me to what extent you agree or disagree with these statements.

Write a number 1-7, or 8 for those who don’t know

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
Strongly agree						disagree	Doesn’t know

Taking into account the current situation of this country, I would like you to tell me how much you agree or disagree with the following statements, again using card B:

POP101. It is necessary for the progress of this country that our presidents/prime ministers limit the voice and vote of opposition parties, how much do you agree or disagree with that view? 8. DK/DR		POP101
POP102. When the Congress hinders the work of our government, our presidents/prime ministers should govern without the Congress. How much do you agree or disagree with that view? 8. DK/DR		POP102
POP103. When the Supreme Court/Constitutional Tribunal hinders the work of our government, it should be ignored by our presidents/prime ministers. How much do you agree or disagree with that view? 8. DK/DR		POP103

POP106. Our presidents/prime ministers must follow the will of the people because what the people want is always right. How much do you agree or disagree with that view? 8. DK/DR	POP106
POP107. The people should govern directly and not through elected representatives. How much do you agree or disagree? 8. DK/DR	POP107
POP109. In today's world there is a battle between good and evil, and people must choose between one of the two. How much do you agree or disagree that such a battle between good and evil exists? 8. DK/DR	POP109
POP110. Once the people decide what is right, we must prevent opposition from a minority. How much do you agree or disagree with that view? 8. DK/DR	POP110
POP112. The biggest obstacle to progress in our country is the dominant class or oligarchy that takes advantage of the people. How much do you agree or disagree with that view?	POP112
POP113. Those who disagree with the majority represent a threat to the interests of the country. How much do you agree or disagree with that view? 8. DK/DR	POP113

EFF1. Those who govern this country are really interested in what people like me think. How much do you agree or disagree?	EFF1
EFF2. I feel that I understand the most important political issues of this country. How much do you agree or disagree.	EFF2

Don't take back Card B

DEM23. Democracy can exist without political parties. How much do you agree or disagree or disagree with this statement?	DEM23

Now I am going to read some items about the role of the national government. Please tell me to what extent you agree or disagree with the following statements. We will continue using the same scale from 1 to 7.

ROS1. The (Country) government, instead of the private sector, should own the most important enterprises and industries of the country. How much do you agree or disagree with this statement?	ROS1
ROS2. The (Country) government, more than individuals, is the most responsible for ensuring the well-being of the people. To what extent do you agree or disagree with this statement?	ROS2
ROS3. The (Country) government, more than the private sector, is the primarily responsible for creating jobs. To what extent do you agree or disagree with this statement?	ROS3
ROS4. The (Country) government should implement firm policies to reduce inequality in income between the rich and the poor. To what extent do you agree or disagree with this statement?	ROS4

[Take back Card "B"]

PN4. In general, would you say that you are very satisfied, satisfied, dissatisfied or very dissatisfied with the form of democracy in country? (1) Very satisfied (2) Satisfied (3) Dissatisfied (4) Very dissatisfied (8) DK/DR	PN4
PN5. In your opinion, is country very democratic, somewhat democratic, not very democratic or not at all democratic? (1) Very democratic (2) Somewhat democratic (3) Not very democratic (4) Not at all democratic (8) DK/DR	PN5

[Give the respondent card "C"]
 Now we are going to use another card. The new card has a 10-point scale, which goes from 1 to 10, where 1 means that you strongly disapprove and 10 means that you strongly approve. I am going to read you a list of some actions that people can take to achieve their political goals and objectives. Please tell me how strongly you would approve or disapprove of people taking the following actions.
