“The puzzling or curious situations I develop appear much like a movie still with an implied story, but few clues are given about the final outcome,” says Professor of Art Marilyn Murphy of her work. “The viewer must determine what has happened to bring the characters or elements to this point and how the situation will resolve itself, often implying the work of an unseen hand just outside the frame.” Shown here: “The Lifesaver,” oils on canvas, 40” X 30”.

Wenyan Zhu could sit back and relax on May 13 as she took her place among more than 2,400 graduates from Vanderbilt's Class of 2005. For four years, she'd driven herself to do her best—and Vanderbilt offered plenty of opportunities to complement her ambition. Thanks to a Carell Scholarship, Wen majored in biomedical engineering, minored in English and biology, volunteered at the Monroe Carell Jr. Children's Hospital at Vanderbilt, and served as prose editor of The Vanderbilt Review. Next up: a degree in dentistry at Columbia University. Make a gift today to the Shape the Future campaign, and you'll help new generations of young men and women like Wen drive the future.

Tomorrow's health care leaders must have a thorough understanding of the transformed dynamics of health care delivery and technology — and the management, finance and operational savvy to capitalize on them.

We're preparing those leaders today — by uniting the resources of Vanderbilt Medical Center, Vanderbilt Owen Graduate School of Management and Nashville's vibrant health care community into one cutting-edge, experienced-based program.

It's world-class preparation for the new world of health care.
And only one place in America brings it all together like this.
