Apply to the ROCCA Lab
Research on Conflict and Collective Action
Participate in rigorous social science research that will inspire public solutions to global questions.
What is ROCCA?

Our mission is to collaboratively produce high-quality international relations (IR) research on political violence and collective action problems.

Collaboration with Faculty Mentors

The lab is helmed by eight IR faculty mentors in the Department of Political Science, with Professor Andrew Coe serving as the Director of the Lab.

Faculty mentors lead a range of various IR projects and guide you through the research process.

There are weekly team meetings with mentors and your peers where you share progress updates and have discussions about the successes and struggles you have encountered throughout the research process.
Ways to be involved in the lab

If accepted, members can participate in the lab via three primary tracks

Research course
Enroll in PSCI-3895 (a 3 credit hour course) to participate in research skill development and professionalization workshops, alongside assignments and discussions centered around conducting team-based research and the research problems encountered along the way.

RECOMMENDED

Independent study
The course is preferred, but you can also enroll as a part of independent study and produce honor's thesis research

Paid research
Spots are limited, but there is the opportunity for pay thanks to funding from Immersion Vanderbilt.
Participating in the ROCCA Lab can serve as a means of fulfilling the Immersion Vanderbilt requirement.

You still need to submit a project proposal and specify your plan, but the lab is here to support your Immersion experience.
