Why behavioral interview questions matter

Great businesses are built on people. People who not only have the right skills and experience, but who have the potential to do great things in the role, the team and in the company.

However, screening candidates for potential is the toughest part of an interview. Oftentimes, you assess someone’s potential by looking at their soft skills and unique perspectives. Yet in a 30 minute conversation, it’s really difficult to fully understand the person behind the profile.

The good news is that behavioral interview questions are a proven way to reveal a person’s potential, specifically their ability to adapt, grow, collaborate, prioritize, lead, and strengthen company culture. By looking at their past behavior as well as their skills and experience, you’ll instinctively know if they have all the qualities you need in your next hire.

To help you be more efficient and effective, we surveyed nearly 1,300 hiring managers for their top behavioral interview questions. Scroll through for the best questions to ask, and tips to glean the answers you need.

What are the three things that are most important to you in a job?

What would make you choose our company over others?

Tell me about a time in the last week when you’ve been satisfied, energized, and productive at work. What were you doing?

What’s the most interesting thing about you that’s not on your resume?

What’s the biggest misconception your coworkers have about you and why do they think that?

When we talk about culture fit, we don’t mean falling into a “hire like me” mentality. If all of your employees act and think the same, your company won’t thrive. Instead, look for candidates who share the same beliefs and values as your organization, but also bring diversity of thought and experience that will drive your company forward. We call this a “culture add.”

Here are some of the most popular questions to ask:

1. What are the three things that are most important to you in a job?
2. Tell me about a time in the last week when you’ve been satisfied, energized, and productive at work. What were you doing?

Growth potential
Recall a time when your manager was unavailable when a problem arose. How did you handle the situation? With whom did you consult?

Describe a time when you volunteered to expand your knowledge at work, as opposed to being directed to do so.

What would motivate you to make a move from your current role?

When was the last occasion you asked for direct feedback from a superior? Why?

What's the biggest career goal you've ever achieved?

How to screen for growth potential

Today's fast-paced work environments require employees who can do the job now, and have the potential to grow into new roles or leadership positions at your company in the future. A key factor is the ability to screen for growth potential. You can predict if a candidate has what it takes by asking goal-setting and self-motivation. Here are some of the most popular questions to ask:

1. Describe a time when you volunteered to expand your knowledge at work, as opposed to being directed to do so.
2. Did you consult a peer or manager when a problem arose? How did you handle the situation with whom?
3. What would motivate you to make a move from your current role?
4. When was the last occasion you asked for direct feedback from a superior? Why?
5. What's the biggest career goal you've ever achieved?

If an employee leaves, it costs your company that employee’s salary. If you replace an employee who has the potential to grow, both benefits are realized: you replace the employee, and you save money. Screen for growth potential at the outset of the hiring process to ensure that you’re hiring employees who can do the job now, and who are capable of growing into leadership positions within your company. After all, if your company’s employees are motivated to grow into new roles or leadership positions, you’ll save money, and have the potential employees who can do the job now, and have the potential to do more in the future.

20 Behavioral Interview Questions
Tell me about a time when you had to juggle several projects at the same time. How do you determine what amount of time is reasonable for each task? How did you organize and schedule the tasks? What was the result?

Tell me about a project that you planned. How did you organize and schedule the tasks? Did you handle it successfully?

Describe a time when you felt stressed or overwhelmed. How did you handle it?

Give an example of a time when you delegated an important task successfully.

Tell me about a project that you planned. How did you organize and schedule the tasks? What was the result?

Tell me about a time when you had to juggle several projects at the same time. How do you organize your time? What was the result?

How to screen for prioritization

When juggling multiple tasks, we have to be able to prioritize effectively. This will help you manage your time and business. People who can manage their time and prioritize effectively will help your business thrive.

When prioritizing multiple tasks, we have to be able to determine which tasks need to be tackled immediately, and which ones can wait. Hiring someone who can’t get this right means that key deadlines and project timelines can fall through the cracks, ultimately hurting your business.
Creative Questions

While these interview questions help you identify high-potential candidates and select the best, asking the right questions doesn’t guarantee great answers. Push candidates to give you better information by doing the following:

1. Use the S.T.A.R. system: As the situation, task, don’t accept situational (hypothetical) responses; when you ask for specific examples, make sure candidates don’t give you situational information. When they describe each question, make sure each answer comes after a moment of reflection, so don’t rush them off if they don’t answer quickly.

2. Give them time: Often good answers come a moment after a specific piece of missing information. Hone in on a specific piece of information, dig deeper into the situation, and follow up when they don’t answer.

3. Don’t accept situational responses: If candidates don’t give you action and result, ask for specific examples. When they describe each question, make sure each answer comes after a moment of reflection, so don’t rush them off if they don’t answer quickly.

4. Follow up: Hone in on a specific piece of missing information.

Methodology

In May 2016, LinkedIn surveyed 1,297 Hiring Managers in the US, Canada, UK, Netherlands, Australia and India. Hiring Managers are defined as those who currently manage people and either recently hired, are currently trying to hire or plan to hire new people for their team (based on survey responses). Members were selected at random to take our survey and are not necessarily representative of the LinkedIn sample. The LinkedIn sample (and any analysis) is influenced by how members choose to use the site, which can vary based on professional, social, and regional culture, as well as overall site availability and accessibility. These variances were not accounted for in the analysis.
