

Examples of Ineligible Expenses

The Employee Critical Support Fund reimburses actual expenses arising from qualifying events, so you can recover quickly. Below are non-exhaustive lists of bills, costs, payments, and other expenses that are examples of ineligible expenses:

- Loss of household income due to reduction in hours or overtime, the loss of a job, a divorce, or the loss of child support.
- Credit card bills, auto, and other debt, not incurred as a result of a temporary hardship.
- Regular monthly bills when the financial distress is not the result of a temporary hardship.
- Wage garnishments, disconnection notices, or eviction notices not related to a temporary hardship.
- Accidental damages due to the negligence of the applicant.
- Furniture, appliances, electronics
- Non-essential utilities such as cable television
- Legal fees
- Standard living expenses that do not cause financial stress.
- When other aid or assets are readily available.
